Maman Farouk • I agree too. Indeed, in the models that I use to develop communication strategies, I always start by a participatory diagnosis with key actors in the field. When the subject is delicate, I conduct perception studies to establish stakeholders map. It is very informative and always helpful.

Lars Soeftestad • Cesare, Maman and Roger, Thanks for your comments! Some comments: (1) stakeholder analysis is an essential first step, but it is a tool that with advantage also can be used throughout implementation of projects and programme, as a type of monitoring tool, (2) I have myself so far not stakeholder analysis that are specifically targetet at urban settings. Perhaps any of you others know about this? If I come across such data and documents I will inform you. More generally: in a generally accepted dichotomy, besides urban settings there are rural settings, and I do not think that there has to be a vast difference between how stakeholder analysis is applied in these two settings. The stakeholders will be different, however, their goals, arguments, needs, means, etc. are likely not that different. Cesare, is this helpful? (3) To you all, your brief comments are helpful. If you would care to put detail them more it would be much more useful for us all. PS. (1) I will send invitation to you all to join my network, (2) we have this week purchased the domain stakeholderanalysis.net. When ownership is transferred and we can begin building the site, I would like to benefit from your expertise in this area, and invite you to comment upon the draft site. Kind regards, Lars

Lars Soeftestad • As announced yesterday, I have set up a LinkedIn group "Stakeholder analysis" where we can continue this discussion. I have send a direct invitation to you Maman (as we are connected). For the others among you, that is, Cesare, Marco and Roger, I hope also to see you in this group!

Lars Soeftestad • Greetings all, further to my email a while back, the new group "Stakeholder analysis" is not active, as is the associated website (www.supras.biz/methods - which will move to www.stakeholderanalysis.net). The discussions that were initiated in this thread will continue under the new group, together with lots more information, especially as available on the accompanying website. For those among you that have not already done so, please go there, check it it (incl. the website) and become members in order to initiate and share in the discussions. PS. This discussion thread will be avaiable in the resources section of the website as a pdf file.

Kind regards, Lars

Lars Soeftestad • Oops! I wrote that the "new group "Stakeholder analysis" is not active" - it should of course be "now active". Potentially interesting Freudian slip. Mea culpa!
